Once upon a time there lived an old king of Britain. His name was Lear. He had 3 daughters: Goneril, Regan and Cordelia.

One day King Lear called his daughters and said to them:

‘I am very old and tired. I cannot be the king of Britain any more.
(6) _____ Each of you will be the queen of her part of the country. But first you must tell me how much you love me. Then I shall know which of you must get the better part’.

Goneril and Regan were not good daughters. They did not love their father. But they were very greedy. (7) _____ They were glad to hear that their father wanted to divide his country into three parts. They only thought how to get the larger and the better part of the country. So Goneril said:

‘Dear Father, I love you very much. (8) _____ No child loves his father more than I love you’.

Regan said the same, but in different words.

King Lear was very glad. Then he asked his youngest daughter Cordelia to speak. She was his favourite daughter.

(9) _____ She loved her father very much, but she didn’t want to repeat the words of her sisters. So she said nothing. Only when King Lear told her angrily that she must speak, she said:

‘I don’t understand why my sisters say that they love you more than anything else. (10) _____. Don’t they love their husbands? You are my father, and of course I love you. But when I marry, I shall love my husband, too.’

King Lear did not like Cordelia’s words. He shouted at her and said that he did not want to have such a daughter. He divided the country between Goneril and Regan and gave Cordelia nothing.
